Jeanette Garlett

Jeanette is a Nyungar Aboriginal woman. She was removed from her family at a young age and was in Mogumber Mission from 1956 to 1968, where she attended the Mogumber Mission School and Moora Junior High School.

Jeanette later moved to Queensland and gained an Associate Diploma of Arts from the Townsville College of TAFE, majoring in screen printing batik.

From 1991 to present day, Jeanette has had 10 major exhibitions and has been awarded four commissions Australia-wide. Jeanette was the recipient of the Dick Pascoe Memorial Shield. Bill Hayden was presented with one of her paintings on a Vice Regal tour of Queensland. In 1993 several of her paintings were sent to Iwaki in Japan (sister city of Townsville in Japan).

A recent major commission was to create a mural for the City of Armadale (working with Elders and students from the community) to depict the life of Aboriginal Elders from 1950 to 1980.

Jeanette is currently commissioned by the Mundaring Arts Centre to work with students from local schools to design and paint bus shelters — the established theme is the four seasons.

Through her art, Jeanette assists Aboriginal women involved in domestic and traumatic situations, to express their feelings in order to commence their journey of healing.

Jeanette currently lives in Northam with her family and is actively working as an artist and art therapist in that region. Jeanette also lectures at the O’Connor College of TAFE.

Her dream is to have her work acknowledged and respected by her peers and the community.
INTRODUCTION

Bringing them home, the report of the National Inquiry into the Separation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Children From Their Families (April 1997), showed how important it is that Aboriginal people affected by forcible removal receive information about their families and their origins. The lack of this knowledge has caused distress for many people over many years.

In response to Recommendation 23 of Bringing them home, the Western Australian Government established a Records Taskforce to identify, locate and preserve records associated with Aboriginal people. The members of the taskforce have worked together to locate government and non-government records relating to Aboriginal people in Western Australia. Extensive negotiations have occurred with church groups who hold relevant records of cultural significance. Indexes of these records have been obtained for use as reference points by the Department for Community Development’s Family Information Records Bureau, which is a ‘first stop shop’ for Aboriginal people seeking this information.

Looking West — A Guide to Aboriginal Records in Western Australia is the culmination of this work. This guide details the location of records, type of service, years of operation, information in records and contact details.

The Government recognises the responsibilities of past policies and, in doing so, will continue to review and improve the way in which information is delivered as more becomes available. This guide will continue to grow as new collections are identified.

To ensure that the collection remains up-to-date the guide will be regularly updated by the Department for Community Development’s Family Information Records Bureau.

The guide may be viewed on the Department for Community Development’s website at http://www.lookingwest.communitydevelopment.wa.gov.au.

Australian Churches of Christ Indigenous Ministries (ACCIM)

The Australian Churches of Christ Indigenous Ministries (ACCIM) was formerly called the Churches of Christ Federal Aborigines Mission Board Inc (CCFAMBI). The Churches of Christ Federal Aborigines Mission Board Inc officially became part of Churches of Christ in Australia in 1942. The WA Government authorised the CCFAMBI to conduct a mission at Norseman (Native Reserve number 22179) on 19 January 1943.

This index relates to the following five missions in Western Australia:
- Bamburra Hostel, Yokine
- Carnarvon Mission, Carnarvon
- Fairhaven, Esperance
- Norseman Mission, Norseman
- Roelands Mission, Collie

The index contains the following information:
- Family name
- Given name
- Date of birth
- Place of birth
- Name of parents
- Dates of admission
- Reason for admission
- Notes

Thousands of photos and slides taken at the missions have been copied and identified where possible.

The Private Archives Collection holds records that document the concerns and activities of Western Australia’s private sector. The collection contains original papers, letters, diaries, journals, and manuscripts of individuals and families as well as records of political and social movements, non-government agencies, businesses, and community organisations. There is also a large collection of baptism, marriage, and burial registers from the Anglican and Uniting churches.

Through the Private Archives Collection, it’s intended to build and preserve a wide ranging, representative and unique body of documents and related archival material. The Private Archives exists to help and encourage in depth research into Western Australia’s history, its many cultures, business and industry activities, its social and recreational life, politics, and contemporary concerns.

Special emphasis is given to acquiring and preserving documentary materials from Western Australia’s Aboriginal people and ethnic groups.

Chief Protector of Aborigines Files 1898-1908
Index and Records — State Records Office

In 1898 the Aborigines Protection Board was abolished and its functions taken over by the Aborigines Department, which acted under the direction of the Chief Protector of Aborigines, who was responsible to Parliament. The Chief Protector of Aborigines Files 1898–1908 Index contains a comprehensive listing of all the names of Aboriginal people mentioned within the Chief Protector of Aborigines files (Acc 255, AN 1/2). References to the names and designations of settlers and officials who were directly connected to the events detailed within the files have also been listed, as have references to non-Europeans. The files are arranged by subject and have been numbered consecutively, as they were created, with the numbering sequence starting at the beginning of each year.

Type of service: State Archives Collection

Size of collection: Almost 1,500 files, containing approximately 14,000 pages relating to the administrative functions of the Aborigines Department between 1898 and 1908

Format of records: Microfilm
Index — electronic and hardcopy

Location of records: State Records Office

Information in records: The Chief Protector of Aborigines Files deal with a wide range of topics relating to the welfare of Aboriginals and the general administration of the Aborigines Act 1897 (and later 1905 Act). It includes the admission of Aboriginal children to missions, the distribution of government rations to the old and infirm, and criminal investigations and court cases concerning Aboriginal people.

Access: The files listed in the ‘Chief Protector of Aborigines Files 1898–1908 Index’ may contain sensitive information; however, they are not restricted and may be viewed on microfilm at the State Records Office or online via the State Records Office website:

Colonial Secretary’s Office (CSO) Records — State Records Office

The Colonial Secretary’s Office (CSO) originated with the appointment of Peter Brown Esq as Colonial Secretary of the Swan River Colony on 30 December 1828. As such, the records of the CSO hold a large quantity of information relating to Aboriginal people. Between 1828 and 1886 Aboriginal affairs in Western Australia were the administrative responsibility of the Colonial Secretary, who operated in accordance with policy dictated by the Colonial Office (UK). The CSO continued to manage Aboriginal affairs up until 1887, when the Aborigines Protection Board was established. After Federation, the Office of the Colonial Secretary continued, although with reduced functions, as many of the CSO’s responsibilities passed over to various State and Commonwealth departments. In 1924 the CSO was renamed the Chief Secretary’s Department.

Correspondence relating to Aboriginal people may be located by searching the indexes and registers to the Colonial Secretary’s Office correspondence located in the SRO Search Room.

Dr Neville Green has compiled indexes of names of Aboriginal people found in the CSO records for the Murchison, Southwest, Pilbara, Gascoyne, and Kimberley regions. CSO records have also been partially indexed in The Bicentennial Dictionary of Western Australians, which includes four volumes devoted to Aboriginal people: Vol VI Albany Region 1821–1898; Vol VII New Norcia 1845–1914; Vol VIII Southwest Region 1829–1840; and Vol X Rottnest 1838–1931.

Type of service: State Archives Collection

Size of collection: Unknown

Format of records: The CSO indexes and registers are available in microfilm and hardcopy. The majority of the material from 1828 to 1883 has been microfilmed, after this period you will need to request the original files for viewing in the State Records Office Search Room.

Information in records: Records from the Colonial Secretary’s Department include inward and outward correspondence, minutes, reports, indexes, registers and some personal Aboriginal files.

Community Welfare Index and Files

The Department for Community Welfare was established in 1972 when the Community Welfare Act came into being and through the amalgamation of the Child Welfare and the Native Welfare Departments. The Department has undergone several name changes since then and is now known as the Department for Community Development.

This index contains details held on the Department for Community Development’s record information management system TRIMS, and complements the Native Welfare index and files held in the Family Information Research System.

The following is an example of the type of information that may be found in the Community Welfare files:

- Date of birth
- Copies of birth certificates
- Date of marriage
- Medical records
- School reports
- Family information

The index contains some of the following details:

- Family name
- Given name
- Date of birth
- File number

Years of operation: 1972 to present

Type of service: Welfare

Access: An Aboriginal Family History application form needs to be completed and access is restricted to direct line family descendants only. There is no charge. This information is not available to researchers.

Education and School — State Records Office

The State Records Office holds archival material from the Education Department of Western Australia and its predecessors including records from individual government schools and colleges from around Western Australia. For individual school records refer to the index, arranged alphabetically by school name, held in the State Records Office Search Room. Not all school records held at the State Records Office are listed in this index and please note that many school records either have not survived or are still held by the individual schools.

Years of operation: 1847 to present day

Type of service: State Archives Collection

Size of record collection: Approximately 315 metres of general files and records for 730 schools are indexed

Format of records: General files up to 1902 and the majority of admission registers and the teachers’ record of service cards are on microfilm. Material not microfilmed will need to be requested for viewing in the State Records Office Search Room.

Location of records: State Records Office

Information in records: The following types of records may contain information relating to Aboriginal people. Attendance files provide statistics on the daily or weekly attendance or non-attendance of children at the school and may give the names of children attending a particular school.

Student admission cards record the name of the student, the date of admission, the date of birth, the name and occupation of parent/guardian, and religious denomination.

Student admission registers record the student’s name, the date of admission, the date of birth, residence, place of birth, the school last attended, the standard last passed, the name of the parent/guardian, the date of withdrawal from school, the reason for withdrawal, the standard passed, and to what school the student was removed.

Punishment books, which are a record of punishment (eg. reprimand, caning) meted out to students, record the name of the student, the date, the amount and instrument of punishment, by whom the punishment was administered, and additional remarks.

(Note: access restrictions apply to punishment books).

Health Records — State Records Office

The State Records Office holds archival material from the Department of Health and its predecessors. Indexes to the records are available in the State Records Office Search Room. In addition to departmental records, the SRO holds several collections of records transferred from individual hospitals including Fremantle Asylum, Claremont Mental Hospital, Heathcote Mental Hospital, Derby Leprosarium, Wooroloo Sanatorium, and the Children’s Hospital which became Princess Margaret Hospital for Children in 1949. The number of hospital-related records held by the SRO is limited, with only sporadic coverage of admissions and discharge records and no patient files. Hospital and health records may contain information relating to Aboriginal people.

Jigalong Mission

In 1907 the Rabbit Proof Fence construction team established a maintenance and rations store at the location which later became Jigalong. It was also a camel-breeding depot, which closed in the 1930s with the introduction of motor vehicles. In 1946 the Apostolic Church was granted the land for missionary purposes and set up the community in its present location. The land was handed back to the government in 1969 and through efforts of the Martu people, Jigalong became an incorporated body in 1973.

This index was collected from the Department for Community Development office in Marble Bar. The Jigalong Mission Index contains information relating to people living there at the time. It is unknown by whom or when the information was recorded.

Kalumburu Mission
(associated with New Norcia Mission)

The mission was established at Pago in 1908, and was called Drysdale River Mission. It moved to Kalumburu including the Church from Pago in the years 1932 to 1937. Benedictine monks and nuns administered the mission until it was handed over to the Diocese of Broome in 1981. Today, Kalumburu parish has Benedictine Sisters, lay missionaries and volunteers, a priest and parish council.

This index contains the names of Aboriginal people who resided at the Kalumburu Mission.

Lost Lands Report

The Lost Lands Report was drafted by the former Aboriginal Affairs Department in 1997 in response to the recommendations of the 1996 Aboriginal Lands Trust Review.

The report contains information about lands set apart for the use of the Aboriginal community in Western Australia until December 1996. The report’s principal source of historical land information is the Crown Reserves Register, which is maintained by the Department for Planning and Infrastructure (formerly the Department of Land Administration).

The report also lists most of the land contained in the estate of the Aboriginal Lands Trust as at December 1996.

National Archives of Australia Collection

The National Archives of Australia's collection documents mainly Commonwealth Government activities since Federation in 1901. The collection also includes some material transferred to the Commonwealth by colonial and state governments.

Records include information about Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and their history, particularly of Northern Territory and Victorian people. The records cover:

- Administration of the Northern Territory (including Aboriginal affairs from 1911 to 1978)
- Administration of Aboriginal affairs in Victoria from 1860 to about 1970
- Commonwealth Government activities affecting the general community including Aboriginal people, eg employment, social security, education
- Commonwealth Aboriginal affairs from the early 1970s (after the 1967 constitutional referendum).

Location: Australia-wide, but mainly relating to Aboriginal people in the Northern Territory and Victoria

Type of Service: Commonwealth Government Departmental records (1901 to present); Victorian Government Aboriginal affairs records (1860 to c1970); Northern Territory administration records, including Aboriginal welfare records (1911 to 1978).

Format of records: Mainly files, but also includes photographs, maps, plans, films and sound recordings

Location of records: The National Archives holds records about Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people in its National Office in Canberra and in regional offices in each state and mainland territory capital. The most extensive holdings are located in Canberra, Melbourne and Darwin.

Information in records: Information about Northern Territory and Victorian Aboriginal people, places and events, social welfare activities, missions, children’s institutions, reserves, and stations. There is some information about people in other States. Information about some Western Australian people is included in records relating to the Northern Territory and South Australia.
Access: Researchers can apply for access to records more than 30 years old under the Commonwealth Archives Act 1983. Sensitive information about personal affairs is withheld from general public access. However, if the information is about the individual requesting information or if the information is required to assist people separated by former government policies to link up with family and community, access may be given.

Access to records less than 30 years old needs to be arranged through the agency that controls the records or, where appropriate, by use of the Commonwealth Freedom of Information Act 1982.

The National Archives of Australia’s Bringing Them Home Name Index was created as part of the Commonwealth Government’s response to Recommendation 22 of the 1997 Bringing Them Home report of the National Inquiry into the Separation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Children from their Families.

Archives staff have indexed many of the major groups of records referring to Aboriginal people from the records relating to:

- Administration of the Northern Territory from 1911 to early 1970s
- Administration of Aboriginal affairs in Victoria from 1860 to about 1970

In addition, Aboriginal names in a small number of records more than 30 years old relating to general Commonwealth Government activities have been indexed.

Location: Australia-wide, but mainly about Aboriginal people in the Northern Territory and Victoria

Type of service: The index includes Northern Territory administration records including Aboriginal welfare records (1911 to early 1970s); Victorian Government Aboriginal affairs records (1860 to c1970); and Commonwealth Government Departmental records (1901 to early 1970s).

Size of collection: The index includes more than 330,000 name index entries and entries are being added

Location of records: National Archives of Australia

Format of records: Mainly files and photographs

Information in the index: Names of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

Names of non-Indigenous people related to or associated with Indigenous people.

Names of missions, stations and institutions where Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people lived.

The index itself does not contain the information about the people named — the index entries refer the researcher to the original file or photograph. The researcher then needs to request access to the original item (see next page).
The index is searched by Archives staff on behalf of researchers. Most of the index entries refer to records held in the National Archives offices in Darwin, Melbourne and Canberra, with some entries referring to records held in Perth, Adelaide, Brisbane and Sydney.

Researchers seeking access to enable them to link up with Aboriginal families and communities can request a search be made of the Bringing Them Home Name Index.

If relevant entries are identified then researchers can apply for access to the records referred to in the index entries under the Commonwealth Archives Act 1983. Sensitive information about personal affairs is withheld from general public access. However, if the information is about the individual requesting information or if the information is required to assist people separated by former government policies to link up with family and community, access may be given.

Native Welfare Index and Personal Client Files

This index was created from index cards from the Department of Native Welfare and previous departments dealing with Aboriginal affairs. These cards list surnames and given names of family members, often date of birth and the client file number. Most of these personal client files were transferred onto microfilm in the mid 1970s. These files have now been transferred from microfilm to CD and have been downloaded into the Family Information Research System (FIRS) database.

The following is an example of the type of information that may be found in the Native Welfare files:
- Date of birth
- Date of death
- Date of marriage
- Employment permits
- Employment records, ie wages
- Medical expense records

This index includes some of the following information:
- Family name
- Given name
- Date of birth
- Date of death
- Place of birth/locality
- File number
- Notes such as parent’s name, spouse’s name and children’s names

Years of operation: 1921 to 1972

Type of service: Welfare

Location of records: Department for Community Development

Access: An Aboriginal Family History application form needs to be completed and access is restricted to direct line family descendants. There is no charge. This information is not available to researchers.

Personal History Cards and Files

In the period from 1920 to 1948, the Native Welfare Department or its predecessor departments compiled a collection of personal files with information about Aboriginal people and their families, which was often highly intrusive.

The personal history cards are extracts from the personal files and contain information relating to individuals and families, particularly those who had been sent to the Moore River Native Settlement.

Location: Moore River Native Settlement, Mogumber — approximately 100 km north of Perth

Years of operation: 1917 to 1965

Type of service: Welfare

Size of collection: 5,500 cards and files

Location of records: Department of Indigenous Affairs

Information in records: Name (alias), Age, Date of birth, Sex, Caste, Marital status, Parentage, Health, Employment details, Location, Registration

Format of records: Database ‘In-Magic’ gives access to the name and number of the card pertaining to individual Aboriginal people and their families. Microfiche — the entire collection of personal history cards. Paper — personal files. Excel spreadsheet — index to individual and family names corresponding to the personal history cards numbers and personal files.

Roelands Mission

Roelands Mission, originally known as Roelands Native Mission, was on land donated by Albany Bell. At any one time, it provided residential care for up to 60 children who lived there to attend school in the area. In 1975 the Churches of Christ Federal Aborigines Board bought the property and the name changed to Roelands Village. Childcare ceased at Roelands at the end of 1984. The property continues to be an integral part of the Australian Churches of Christ Indigenous Ministries. This information forms part of the Australian Churches of Christ Indigenous Ministries’ index. There are also thousands of photos and slides taken at the missions which are currently being copied and identified where possible.

Sister Kate’s Home
(also known as Children’s Cottage Home)

Sister Kate’s in Queens Park was established for quarter-caste children in 1934. June Lefroy donated her five acre block of land to be used to build homes for underprivileged children. Most of the children were received from the Moore River Native Settlement. Sister Kate opened the home in 1934 and ran the home until she passed away in 1946. The legal change of name for the Children’s Cottage Home to Sister Kate’s Home took place in 1948 after her death as a memorial to her work. In 1977 the Uniting Church took over management of the home. In 1989 the name changed to Manguri.

The State Records Office (SRO) of Western Australia is the government body responsible for identifying, storing and providing access to State and Local government records of historical importance.

In Western Australia, successive State Government agencies controlled the lives of Aboriginal people from 1905 until they were granted citizenship rights in the 1960s. The official records that document this control are of vital significance, particularly for those people who were removed from their families and resettled elsewhere in the State. Many of these records are now held at the State Records Office. The records generally have subject or locality based titles; ie they concern places where Aboriginal people lived such as missions, pastoral properties, town reserves and institutions (such as Moola Bulla and Moore River). However, very few of the records are personal or family files.

The records from the various departments that managed Aboriginal affairs are restricted from 1908 onwards. Permission must be obtained from the Department of Indigenous Affairs to access records that were created after 1908. Staff at the SRO can assist you in completing applications to access these records.

Other State Government records created by government schools, police stations, courts of law, prisons and various other agencies are also important sources of family history information for all people with Western Australian ancestry. Please refer to the additional State Records Office entries in this guide for further information on such government records.

The SRO has a number of finding aids and indexes that can provide short cuts to information contained in the archives. Staff can help you locate and use these indexes and researchers are welcome to ask for further assistance at the Search Room enquiry desk.

Location: Western Australia

Type of service: State Archives Collection

Size of collection: 14 shelf kilometres of records

Format of records: Records are held in original formats including files, cards, volumes, maps, plans, charts, computer printouts, film, microform, and photographs with copies of some available on microfilm and on computer discs

Location of records: State Records Office
A wide and varied range of information is held in the State Records Office from State Government agencies that have been in existence since the colonisation of Western Australia.

Records held at the SRO must be viewed in the SRO Search Room. The Search Room is open from Monday to Friday 9.30am to 4.30pm. Staff are available at the enquiry desk during these hours to assist researchers with accessing records.

The State Records Office also has a website which gives further information about the services available to researchers: http://www.sro.wa.gov.au/

'Station Files Index’ — Department of Indigenous Affairs — State Records Office

The Stations Index lists the records in the general file series of the Department of Indigenous Affairs and its predecessors that pertain to particular stations throughout the State (e.g., Clifton Downs, Minderoo, etc).

The index is made of two volumes. Volume 1 covers 1898 to 1925 and Volume 2 1951 to 1972. Both Volumes are arranged alphabetically by station name and list the file number, year, and accession number in which the file is located.

Location: Western Australia
Type of service: State Archives Collection
Size of collection: Volume 1 lists 418 files from 222 stations
Volume 2 lists 405 files from 348 stations
Location of records: State Records Office
Information in records: Station files held in the State Records Office may contain personal information relating to Aboriginal people
Access: Department of Indigenous Affairs (DIA) records are restricted from 1909 onwards. To view restricted files listed in the ‘Station Files Index’ clients will need to apply for access with DIA. Note: These records were correct at the time of printing, however, record collections are continually being updated and increased.
The Department for Community Welfare was established in 1972 when the Community Welfare Act came into being, and through the amalgamation of the Child Welfare and the Native Welfare Departments. The Department has undergone several name changes since then and is now known as the Department for Community Development.

This index was created from details held on old Native Welfare files relating to the stations listed below. These details were gathered by officers who regularly visited the stations to check on the conditions and welfare of Aboriginal people living and working at these stations. These microfilm files have now been imaged onto CD and have been downloaded into the Family Information Research Systems (FIRS) database.

The following is an example of the type of information that may be contained in the Native Welfare station files:

- Family name
- Given name
- Date of birth
- Date of death
- Place of birth
- Parents’ names
- Siblings names

Location: Kimberley, Goldfields, Murchison, Pilbara and Gascoyne regions

Type of service: Welfare

Format of records: Microfilm and electronic

Location of records: Department for Community Development

Information in records: Family information

Access: An Aboriginal Family History application form needs to be completed and access is restricted to direct line family descendants only. There is no charge. This information is not available to researchers.

Tindale

The Board for Anthropological Research at the University of Adelaide was formed in 1926. A series of expeditions to study the Australian Aboriginal tribe’s terrain, environmental controls, distribution, limits, and proper names was organised by the Board and was undertaken over a period of time. The expedition party included Norman and Dorothy Tindale, Joseph and Esther Birdsell (Associate Professor of Anthropology, UCLA) and Phillip Jud Epling (student, University of California).

During field trips to Western Australia, commencing 1935 through to 1939 and again in 1953, Tindale and his associates compiled a comprehensive collection of journals, genealogies and photographs, including maps and drawings relating to Aboriginal people.

These records are currently in the Museum of South Australia, however, the Department of Indigenous Affairs holds a complete copy of these records. This index contains information on Aboriginal people of Western Australia in the following categories:

- Family name
- Given name
- Parentage
- Date of birth
- Where they lived
- With whom they lived
- Employment
- Names of children and their date of birth
- Caste
- Photographs
- Skin

Type of service: Anthropological research
Tindale (cont.)

Size of collection: The information covers individuals and families of 120 tribal groups of Western Australia.

Location of records: The Museum of South Australia and the Department of Indigenous Affairs, Perth. The Department for Community Development, Perth holds an index of Western Australian names in the Tindale collection.

Information in records: Genealogies including date recorded, family ancestors, sex, age, skin and language groups, and reference to photographs. Journals including tribal language and skin groups, totems, boundaries, landmarks, and reference to photographs. The journals form the core of Tindale’s life work. Photographs taken by Norman B. Tindale, Dorothy Tindale and Associates. All photographs are identified by Tindale and cross-referenced to the genealogies and journals.

Format of records: Database (copyright owned by South Australian Museum) — gives access to names of Aboriginal people throughout Australia. Microfiche — genealogies relevant only to Western Australian families. Hardcopy — journals contain information relating to Western Australian tribal groups. CD-Rom — photographs relating to the Aboriginal people of Western Australia.

Access: An Aboriginal Family History application form needs to be completed and access is restricted to direct-line family descendants only. There is no charge. Department of Indigenous Affairs Native Title Access Policy — restricted to Native Title representative bodies for purposes of Native Title litigation. The information is not available to external researchers.
